Investment Review

Equity markets made further progress over the period as growing confidence in the sustainability of US economic growth, good company results and the prospect of lower interest rates provided positive momentum to share prices. In sterling terms the best performing regions were the Far Eastern (ex Japan) and North American markets.

Consensus expectations that the dollar would weaken and that bond yields would rise were confounded. Despite strong commodity prices – most notably oil – inflationary expectations have remained subdued as increasing levels of the world's manufacturing activity continue to shift towards lower cost economies in Asia, and in particular China.

Our expectation that growth stocks would outperform failed to materialise in the first half, although recently global growth companies have begun to show relative strength. We continue to believe that, as the world economy grows at more modest levels, at least compared to the rate experienced last year, investors will favour companies which have the ability to grow their earnings on a sustainable basis in more challenging conditions.

Having looked at the impact on overall portfolio risk we also believe that there is merit in the current environment in focusing the portfolio on a more limited number of holdings and have consequently decided to reduce the number of stocks in the overseas portfolio to around 50 – 60 from the current 88. This follows our move to a more focused portfolio in the UK and will bring the total number of portfolio holdings to a range of 90 – 110 compared to 140 – 160 in May last year.

In the UK there are now signs that the domestic economy is slowing in a number of key areas. A stagnating housing market – both in terms of prices and activity – has clearly had a greater impact on consumer expenditure than many expected, and growth in government spending is also likely to moderate. In this environment we have remained underweight in consumer related shares and have favoured the pharmaceutical, oil and computer software sectors. The prospect of reducing interest rates in the second half of the year should prove supportive to current valuations

The twin US deficits, and the capital flows required to sustain them, retain their potential to destabilise currency markets and the current benign interest rate environment. However growing international trade in manufactured goods brings benefits both to the developed and developing worlds so it is quite possible that these apparently large global imbalances will persist for some time without adverse consequences for equity markets. It is encouraging to note the resilience of markets in the wake of the recent terrorist attacks in London.
